Ten Thousand Dollars Dead or Alive: The Hunt for Dick Gregg

On the morning of May 21, 1924, word crackled like wildfire across Osage County: Dick Gregg, a notorious outlaw with ties to the feared Al Spencer gang, had been captured. Just hours earlier, the Farmers State Bank in Burbank, OK had been robbed in a brazen daylight heist. Now, one of the men believed responsible was in custody following a dramatic and violent confrontation deep in the Osage Hills—a region long known as a safe haven for outlaws.

Gunfire in the Oil Fields

Burbank, a booming oil town about 25 miles west of Pawhuska, was left shaken by the robbery. Witness accounts quickly tied Gregg to the scene. But it was swift action by two unlikely lawmen—John Henderson, a former deputy sheriff working as constable of nearby Lyman, and Freddie Graves, a deputized postal worker and son of the town marshal—that brought Gregg to justice.

The showdown unfolded in Lyman, a rough-and-tumble town in the heart of the Burbank oil field. Acting on reports of a disturbance near the Cadillac Rooms, Henderson and Graves approached a boarding house suspected of harboring outlaws. Graves circled back while Henderson knocked on the front door. There, Graves suddenly found himself face-to-face with Dick Gregg. Before he could draw, Gregg had him covered at gunpoint.

Moments later, Henderson entered the scene. Gregg spun around and opened fire. A bullet tore into Henderson's hip. Despite the injury, both men returned fire. Henderson's revolver eventually clicked empty, and Graves's pistol misfired. Gregg pistol-whipped Graves, disarmed both men, and marched them at gunpoint toward a waiting car. "I'm taking you out to the prairie," Gregg warned, "and I'm going to shoot you both."

But fate—and a fearless taxi driver—intervened. As Gregg forced the wounded lawmen into the car, the driver struck the outlaw's hand, knocking his revolver loose. Henderson lunged forward, locking Gregg in a half-nelson. The car exploded into chaos. A violent struggle ensued inside until Gregg was overpowered, shackled, and dragged from the vehicle.

When Marshal Arthur Graves and Deputy Smith Leahy delivered Gregg to the Osage County Jail in Pawhuska that night, he was beaten so badly that jailers couldn't immediately confirm his identity. His eyes were swollen shut beneath heavy bandages.

Gregg wasn't alone. Authorities also arrested Wendall Powell, an alleged ex-convict, and Alta Gregg—reported as either Dick's sister or his wife. She was described as a small woman with black hair and dark eyes and was said to be the getaway driver behind the wheel of the Cadillac sedan.

The Making of an Outlaw

Dick Gregg was no stranger to law enforcement. Born in Nowata, Oklahoma, his rap sheet was long and violent. Two years earlier, he'd been arrested near Bigheart (now Barnsdall) by Deputy Ted Strong alongside associates I.E. Berry and another gang member. Their car was loaded with firearms and ammunition. Strong, unaware of their identities, brought them into Pawhuska alone, where they were placed in the Osage County Jail. Gregg was soon extradited to Kansas, but jumped a $20,000 bond and vanished.

He resurfaced later in Pawhuska, where he engaged in a shootout with Pawhuska police during another attempted arrest. Officer C.E. Van Noy was wounded; Gregg escaped yet again.

He was a suspect in the June 7, 1922, murder of William Lockett, the night marshal of Ochelata, Oklahoma. Lockett was shot through the heart during a burglary that reportedly involved both Gregg and Al Spencer. Weeks later, Gregg and Spencer robbed a bank in Elgin, Kansas, escaping with over $20,000 in bonds and $1,500 in cash, taking hostages and fleeing back across the Oklahoma border.

A Key Witness in the Reign of Terror Osage Murders

By fall 1925, the Osage Indian Murders—also known as the Reign of Terror—had sparked national outrage. Despite Bureau of Investigation agent Tom White making progress, J. Edgar Hoover, still forging his national profile, was demanding results. Fear gripped the Osage Nation, and families began fleeing their homes—some even leaving the country.

In a desperate bid for new leads, Tom White arranged a meeting with Dick Gregg, then serving time in a Kansas penitentiary. Through a local attorney, Gregg was transported to Pawhuska under guard to meet with White at the county jail.

In exchange for a sentence reduction, Gregg offered explosive testimony: he claimed that William Hale, the powerful rancher at the heart of the Osage murder conspiracy, had paid the Spencer gang $2,000 to kill Bill and Rita Smith. Gregg said he refused the hit, insisting he would not murder a woman. Even by the brutal standards of the era, Gregg maintained that killing an Indian woman crossed a moral line.

But before he could testify in open court, Gregg pulled off another sensational escape. In 1927, while being held in Pawhuska for the trial, he escaped the Osage County Jail and vanished into the hills once more.

Final Reckoning

Gregg remained a fugitive for over two years. During that time, he was linked to a string of robberies across the region. The last confirmed sighting came after a robbery of the Peoples State Bank in Wichita, Kansas, on July 26, 1929.

His criminal saga ended weeks later, on August 29, 1929, in a deadly shootout outside Sand Springs, near the Tulsa-Osage County line. After a car accident, Gregg and an accomplice attempted to flee. When Tulsa Highway Patrolmen Ross Darrow and Abraham Bowline tried to make an arrest, Gregg opened fire, killing both officers.

As Patrolman Darrow fell from his wounds, he summoned the strength to return fire—his final act of duty. His bullet struck Gregg, who collapsed and died at the scene, ending one of the most violent outlaw careers in Osage County history. Nearby, officers arrested Bob Dyer, a 29-year-old Indian cowboy from Pawhuska, in connection with the shooting. Dyer told authorities that he and Gregg had traveled to Tulsa the night before to have Gregg's car repaired at a local mechanic's garage. With no prior criminal record and insufficient evidence tying him to the crime, Dyer was later released.

The deaths of Patrolmen Darrow and Bowline left behind grieving widows and children—and marked the grim closing chapter of Dick Gregg's long and bloody reign across the Osage Hills.

Legacy of the Osage Hills

Author Gerald Moore once wrote that, since the days when Abilene, Arkansas City, and Dodge City were young cow towns, the Osage Hills had served as a “haven of the fugitive.” The tangled scrub oak, deep canyons, and rocky ridges formed a natural fortress for those hoping to evade the law.

It was in this unforgiving wilderness that outlaws like Dick Gregg disappeared—and where, sooner or later, justice caught up with them.

Across My Desk By Sheriff Bart Perrier

As we enter the third quarter of 2025, the Osage County Sheriff's Office continues making steady progress on critical infrastructure upgrades and operational improvements that enhance our ability to serve the citizens of Osage County.

At the Osage County Jail, we recently resolved a significant, long-standing plumbing issue in one of the inmate housing areas. With the support of the Osage County Commissioners, we completed this $30,000 repair—eliminating a problem that had persisted for years. Additionally, we've implemented a new RFID tracking system to streamline inmate checks, improving both accountability and safety within the facility.

In July, we entered into a new contract with Dr. Rumsey, a local physician, to provide inmate medical services. We believe this partnership will not only enhance the quality of care for those in custody but also be more cost-effective for the county.

Looking ahead, with approval from the County Commissioners, we will soon begin construction of a new 150-by-50-foot multipurpose facility. This building will provide long-term evidence storage and serve as a central hub for Osage County Emergency Management operations. Two-thirds of the structure will be dedicated to secure storage for evidence, with the remaining third supporting emergency management functions. This project was identified as a top priority early in my term. We anticipate completion by spring 2026, with the Sheriff's Office funding two-thirds of the project cost and Emergency Management covering the remainder.

On the patrol side, I am pleased to report that we are now operating at full staffing, with five deputies assigned to each 12-hour shift. This allows for improved patrol coverage and faster response times countywide.

Our School Resource Officer (SRO) program has also expanded significantly. We now have six SROs serving nine school districts. While most districts still share an SRO, we're proud to announce that starting this school year, the Shidler School District will receive full-time SRO coverage under a new agreement in which the district funds the salary during the academic year. We remain committed to expanding this program to enhance school safety across the county.

The investigations division continues to carry a demanding caseload involving major crimes, property crimes, and narcotics enforcement. While this workload has limited our capacity to fully revisit cold cases, we are actively working to move several of them forward. One area we've identified for targeted improvement is the investigation of sex crimes. Beginning in August, we will assign a dedicated investigator to handle these cases exclusively, along with a full-time Internet Crimes Against Children (ICAC) investigator. This structure is a critical step toward more effectively addressing cases involving sexual predators and safeguarding our most vulnerable citizens. We are actively seeking grant funding and financial support to sustain these specialized roles.

Another important update, Osage County Dispatch has officially assumed responsibility for dispatching police, fire, and EMS services for the City of Pawhuska. This expansion was made possible through a new $100,000 annual contract agreement, further strengthening collaboration and emergency response capabilities.

As always, I remain committed to transparency, accountability, and meaningful progress. I'm proud of the dedication shown by every division within the Sheriff's Office. Thank you to the people of Osage County for your continued trust and support.
